

Step 1: Talk to Other Homeschoolers:

:

Getting started to teach your own children is a challenge; there will be lots of questions and research. However, if you know of homeschoolers talk to them; talk to as many as possible. You can locate them in your hometown, social media, church, local community, etc. Find out what resources and support groups (even social outlets) are available locally, what curriculum they use, and how homeschooling works for them and what do they do. You'll quickly see that homeschooling is a little bit different for everyone and is completely adaptable to your unique family. If you don't already know any homeschoolers locally, the fastest way to find local and state homeschool groups is by doing a search on the internet; visit <https://www.nbhe.net/resources/state-laws> or visit our facebook social community group

- <https://www.facebook.com/Parents-as-Teachers-at-Home-106180037773723/>